I have seen the French southers in campaign, and have observed the superiority of the rapin ments and arrangements for cooking. I purpose hereafter to point out the defect of the clothing, tin cunteen, knapseuk, and too king apparatus of our troops. It is especially in the caking sloves that the military outney department of our soldier is at fault. As to the draws of our men, it is in many respects most inconvenent, but there is a strong tendency among our people to imite the parade lock of the E giths better. It is a missiske. The English, as the Lendon lines more purply observed, while they light with the un nutured courage of the race, know but fittle of the art of war. Lai us not imitate their degreed autherence to old customs and preinlices.
